

What is an Educational Psychology assessment

An Educational Psychology assessment involves working with the child/young person, and the adults around them, to identify and recommend strategies to support their development.

Educational Psychology assessment is more than a one-off test and will typically involve information gained through consultations, observations, documents, as well as individual work with the student (which can involve 1:1 assessment) to gain a full picture of the young person.

The first step in obtaining support from an Educational Psychologist is through the school SENCO/Inclusion Lead. Unfortunately, we are not able to accept direct referrals from parents/carers until we have discussed with the SENCO. However parents/carers can request a call back from one of our EP's.
